Who we are:

Mission Local is a hyperlocal news site and quarterly print publication based in the culturally vibrant, always-happening Mission District of San Francisco. We're an award-winning publication that reaches about 100,000 unique web visitors a month and roughly 10,000 readers of our print edition.

As a historic hotbed of artistic movements, Latino culture, radical activism, foodies, and, most recently, a new wave of tech companies and workers, the Mission is a constantly fascinating and rewarding place to report. Mission Local has been a key player in documenting this special part of the city, breaking and leading the coverage of many citywide and national stories.

We're printed in English and Spanish and syndicated on SFGate.com to further our reach. In addition to print, we also produce many multimedia stories, including short videos, photo essays, and a biweekly podcast. No matter what the specific interests of a potential interns, this would be a great placement.

What you'll do:

Reporting interns – Mission Local is an especially great place for new journalists given its focus on mentorship, on-the-ground training, and experimentation. Former Mission Local contributors have landed jobs at pretty much every major news outlet in America—the Wall Street Journal, the NY Times, NPR and the LA Times, among them. Join the ML Alumni!

Business interns – Do we need you! This is an incredible opportunity to take over the business side and demonstrate that you can make a small site self-sustaining. Our business model is based on business and reader memberships. Do you have a campaign that you want to demonstrate can succeed?
